VOLUME NINE, NUMBER TWENTY-FIVE

It's a bit late to suggest preventive dental care, but the narwhal skull and tusk (LEFT) are still of interest to students, teachers, and practitioners of dentistry. The narwhal, a rare mammal related to dolphins and porpoises, is found in the eastern Arctic seas. Dental interest in the narwhal centres on the tusk, which is found only in the male of the species and is actually a left incisor tooth that can grow to 12 feet in length. A skull with a tusk measuring a modest 2 feet 8 inches has been acquired by the Museum of the Faculty of Dentistry and is on display in the museum, Room 2031 Dentistry-Pharmacy Centre. (The ruler in the photograph is 18 inches long.)

RARE DISCOVERY MADE IN ITALY

Artifacts dating back almost 5,000 years have been found among the remains of a neolithic village in Italy discovered in 1970 by S. P. VINSON, a Post Doctoral Fellow in the University's Department of Classics.

The discovery includes a rare find—some pieces of pottery with manufacturers' marks on the bottom. It is only the second set containing a trademark to be found in Italy.

There are two possible explanations for the marks. There was either country-wide manufacture for export purposes, or there were two potters in the same village who wished to keep their work distinct. Both explanations would indicate a relatively advanced society, a theory that is further supported by the discovery of some tools made from obsidian, a volcanic glass that is not indigenous to mainland Italy but could have been imported from islands in the Tyrrhenian Sea.

Dr. Vinson is the Assistant Director of the excavation project, which has been carried out during the past two summers. He has been working at the site with GEORGE F. BASS, a professor at the University of Pennsylvania, and a number of staff and students from several Canadian and American universities. Funds for the study were provided by the University Museum in Philadelphia, the Ford Foundation, and the British School at Rome.

NOTICES

ALCOHOLISM AND DRUG ADDICTION

The following notice has been received from MAX WYMAN, President of the University.

On November 22, 1972, the Government of Alberta passed Bill No. 125, "The Alberta Alcoholism and Drug Abuse Foundation Act." The major purpose of this Act is to create a corporation whose major function is "to make grants to any person or organization engaged in research into and education in respect of alcoholism and drug abuse."

Since the government now recognizes that alcoholism and drug abuse is a problem of some significance in our society, a member of our staff has written to me suggesting that the University recognize that it has a responsibility to help members of the University community who have problems of this type.

On his own initiative, this member of staff has drafted a possible policy for this University to follow, and has received approval in principle from both the Academic and Non-Academic Staff Associations. At his suggestion, I am now circulating the policy proposal among members of the University community, and would welcome reactions to the proposal.

* * *

1. The University of Alberta recognizes, as an employer, that alcoholism and drug addiction are illnesses which can respond to therapy and treatment, and that absence from duty due to such therapy or treatment shall be considered
